

Contents

Preface .....	vii
Introduction: Maps tell time .....	1
1 Napoleon's Russian campaign .....	5
About Gerrit Janz Kraak.....	15
2 Minard's map .....	17
2.1 The map .....	18
About Minard.....	23
2.2 Minard's work.....	24
2.3 Mapping 1812 .....	34
As a historical event .....	35
Inspired by Minard.....	40
Curiosities.....	42
3 Time.....	45
3.1 What about time? .....	45
3.2 Types of time.....	46
3.3 Events and change .....	49
3.4 Questions and time.....	53
3.5 Temporal data visualization and time-space.....	55
4 Maps, data, and design.....	59
4.1 Map basics.....	59
4.2 Map data analysis .....	64
4.3 Map design .....	70
5 Maps and time .....	77
5.1 Map narrative.....	77
5.2 Expressing change .....	80
Change from object perspective .....	84
Change from attribute perspective.....	86
Change from location perspective .....	90
Change and Minard's representation of Napoleon's Russian campaign.....	94
Change and the map background.....	95
5.3 Change in a single map .....	100
Flow line map.....	100
Cartograms.....	104
Space-time cube .....	112
A third dimension.....	118
5.4 Change in a series of maps .....	118
5.5 Change in animation .....	121
6 Maps and temporal exploration.....	127
6.1 From presentation to exploration .....	127
Mapping environment.....	132
Representation.....	132
Design guidelines .....	132
Visualization strategies .....	133
6.2 Exploring.....	133
Examining Napoleon's battle record .....	134
What happened at the crossing of the Berezina River? .	136
7 Reflection.....	139
References .....	143
Credits.....	149
Index .....	153